Rich Tourists Have Unique Club in Paris.

Fabulous Travelers' Club Where Rich Americans May Meet "Desirable" French, and Avoid "Undesirable" Americans at Paiva Palace.

Paris.-When very rich and prominent Americans like J. Pierpont Morgan, W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., Frank Gould, Pierre Lorillard-Reynolds, Jef ferson de Mont Thompson-and others too numerous to mention-arrive in Paris it is with two natural social requirements: to meet desirable French and avoid undesirable Ameri-

A unique Paris club, the Travelers', aids them in both ambitions. Nor does it prevent them, in spare moments, meeting and avoiding each other.

We all do it. All Americans of Paris, except simple tourists, are under a strain of meeting and avoiding. It might seem snobbish were the cause less painful; Paris is so lonely for Hundreds of all kinds of depressed fellow countrymen approach us in cafes or public squares and plead: "Do let me hear you talk; I'm dying for the sound of the dear home tongue!" The craving is so genuine, and the thing has been done so often, that we all "avoid" a little.

Otherwise we would be loaded up with bores and helpless parties, battening on us for amusement and society. And so it is exactly with Mr Sharpless of Philadelphia, Mr. Macy of New York, Mr. Keep of Chicago Mr. Lambert of St. Louis, and all the other American members of the Travelers' club. Only more so.

It is a unique club in Paris. It is not English, French or American, but all three in one. Americans above the tourist class cannot get on alone

It is, by far, the most magnificently housed club in Paris. The Jockey club is situated above the Grand cafe. The Union Artistique has valuable grounds of the Champs Eyisses; but its building is ramshackle. The Club of the Rue Royale has a slice of Gabriel's noble old columned palace on

The Travelers' is installed in a bijou palace that cost Napoleon III. some 15,000,000 francs. Situated in the best part of the Avenue des Champs Elysees, its interior decorations render it unique even among the noble buildings of Paris. During the last brilliant years of the second empire it was the home of the meteoric Marquis le Paiva-whose souvenir imparts a piquant flavor to the reverie of club members.

The fabulous silver Bathroom of Le Paiva, with its onyx fittings, ruby decorations and Oriental mirrors, still exists-for good Americans to reflect on the vanity of pomp and self-indul-gence. Le Paiva died in Silesta in 1884, her last ten years having been spent in plety and charity.

She was a Russian beauty of the humblest origin. Her husband was a little tailor. He disappeared. She came to Paris to seek work and turned out to be musical. Introduced to the literary and artistic set by the musician Henri Hery, she fascinated Napoleon the Third. A Spanish noble-man, the Marquis le Paiva, married her-at Napoleon's request-to give her respectability. She lived with the marquis in this palace gloriouslyuntil one day, the marquis gave a great dinner party, and at dessert blew his brains out. Which gave him back respectability. Later, she fled Paris, under suspicion as a Russian spy, leaving all her treasures behind end her life in peace and charity. She married Bismarck's cousin, the Count de Donnesmarck, first governor of Alsace-Lorraine. There was a woman,

Now her Paris palace, unique for its heavy splendor, is this club house. Arsene Houssaye, in his "Confessions," tells how the reputation of its marvels fired French imaginations of his day, The famous architect, Pierre Manquin, called in the leading artists of the second empire to execute his plans. Paul Baudry, De Launay and Carrier decorated its salons. leuse sculptured its marbles and painted its allegorical figures. There are panels of wood carving that took six years to execute. In all ten years were occupied. The kitchens in the basement extend under the entire building. Dinners of 110 covers have been cooked in them without straining

EXPLANATION OF "WAR MANEU. VER" REJECTED EVERYWHERE.

Massing of Troops on Friendly Frontier Without Offering Satisfactory Reason Provokes Much Just Criticism.

A faithful newspaper friend of the Washington administration is highly indignant because so many of its contemporaries have seen fit to criticise the administration's mobilization of troops on the Texas border. "It was obvious," writes this stanch defender of Mr. Taft, "that the massing of our army near the Mexican frontier was an act which called for the utmost discretion and tact both in the doing of it and in discussions of it, in order that there might be no unnecessary wounding of the susceptibilities or arousing of groundless suspicions. Yet the moment it was undertaken there' was a chorus of unwarranted and intemperate comments and interpretations, ascribing to our government elther ineptitude or wickedness. . . . It is wrong and may be exceedingly mischievous."

That the "massing" of troops on a friendly frontier was an act requiring the "utmost discretion and tact" will be readily enough conceded. might go farther and admit that it was an act to be justified only by the gravest considerations. But the obviousness of all this did not, apparently, occur to the president until he was forced to recognize it by the huge sensation which a step so extraordinary created. Even then he might have avoided the criticisms and imputations of which his newspaper champion complains, by furnishing a reasonable, or reasonably intelligent, explanation of the step and the considerations which impelled it. Instead, unfortunately, it was explained as a practice maneuver-an explanation at once rejected everywhere and by its very lack of plausibility raising the natural curiosity of the public to the highest pitch. Since that time other reasons have been assigned, none of which are accepted.

Some of the "imputations" to which exception is now taken are rather flattering to the president than otherwise, since they credit him with preparations against contingencies that, if there were reason to expect them, would amply justify his action. There have been others which his friends may justly find objectionable. But their present disposition seems to be to cry down all criticism as "unpatriotic," and the flattering and unflattering "imputations" alike. Their protest is little likely to be heeded. There is no wish, on the part of the public or the press, to condemn Mr. Tar's curious "maneuver" out of hand, but it is neither "mischievous" nor "unpatriotic" to criticise the filmsy effort to mislead the public and the appar ent unwillingness to vouchsafe, even provocative muster of troops on a friendly frontier. Until that is forth- States. coming, we suspect, the discussions of the maneuver, and the efforts to search out its true cause, will continue, with such criticism of the officers responsible for it-who are not, after all, above criticism, nor declared by the constitution infallible—as both these undertakings may imply.

Profits in the Steel Business. That there is money in the steel in dustry even in times of industrial depression is shown by the big earnings of the Inland Steel company, whose mills are located in Indiana Harbor Ind. a few miles north of Gary, Ind. This independent steel company whose stock is very closely held and selling around 163, has recently, in addition to the regular quarterly dividend of 1% per cent., declared an extra dividends of 3 per cent., leaving a total surplus of $2,416,000. The total outstanding stock amounts to only $6,000,000. The total earnings on the stock in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1910, was equal to 25.3 per cent., and officials declare that about the same will be earned in the current fiscal year. If the company were over-capitalized and full of water the situation would be different. Judging by the be in face of the great consumptive power of the country hardly any depression in the steel industry had not so many companies to take care of cial World.

TAFT'S FLIMSY EXCUSE WAS TRIED ONCE BUT FAILED

Ballinger's Idea of Protecting Officials From Criticism Ignores Right of Freedom of Speech.

Former Secretary of the Interior Ballinger is quoted as saying upon his return to Seattle that "the only way to protect an honest and trustworthy public official against assassins of character is to make it the duty of the attorney general to prosecute at the public expense the wicked defamer of his official acts."

It is not so long since a more exalted official than the former secretary promulgated a somewhat similar view and ordered the department of justice to prosecute certain persons charged with defaming certain members of the government. This was the famous Panama libel case, instituted by direction of President Rooseveit and rebuffed by the courts even when carried to the highest tribunal in the land

Matters would have come to a pretty pass if when a member of the administration felt aggrieved at criticism of his official acts he could call upon the attorney general of the United States and at public expense institute a prosecution of his critics. The freedom of speech and of the press guaranteed by the constitution effectually prevent any such attempt to hedge officialdom with censorship of hostile criticism. But perhaps Mr. Ballinger is not so much to blame for offering such a suggestion when it had already been put forward by a president of the United States and only within a few days re-echoed by a mayor of New York who thinks it is sedition to criticize his administration.

Senators by Direct Vote. It is now fairly assured that the day is not remote when United States senators will be elected by direct vote of the people. By the time this paper is printed it is entirely possible that the senate will have given its approval to the principle. At the time of writing the proposal to amend the present Constitution provision for the election of senators is the unfinished business in the senate, with more than fair prospects of favorable action. The house of representatives on four different occasions has passed a bill pro-viding for this reform—July 21, 1894; May 11, 1898; April 13, 1900, and February 13, 1902, the last vote unanimously, or no one opposing. Hitherto the senate has always proved the stumbling block. Seven main reasons are set forth why the Constitution should be amended and the senators chosen by direct vote of the people instead of by the legislatures of the respective states. These reasons are:

It will make the senate of the United States more responsive to the wishes of the people of the United States. It will prevent the corruption of legislatures.

It will prevent the improper use of money in the campaigns before the now, a reasonable explanation of the electorate by men ambitious to obtain a seat in the senate of the United

> It will prevent the disturbance and turmoil of state legislatures and the interference with state legislation by the violent contests of candidates for a position in the United States senate. lection of the best-fitted men. It will prevent deadlocks, due to political contests in which various states from time to time have been thus left unrepresented. It will popularize government and tend to increase the confidence of the people of the United States in the senate of the United States, which has been to some extent impaired in recent years.-Edward G. Lawry in Harper's Weekly.

As to "Tariff Agitation." The plea of Wall street against an extra session of congress on the ground that the country would at once be subjected to the agitation of the tariff question is scarcely sound, even from the standpoint of those who consider merely the passing effect of congressional deliberations on business. The people elected the president showing of this company, there would and a Republican congress in 1908 on a promise of real downward revision of the tariff. They were betrayed. Then they elected a Democratic house and a number of Democratic senators dividends on watered stock.—Finan- in their determination to get down ward revision. The Democrats will control the next house, and it is inevitable that the first thing they will undertake to do when congress meets, whether in regular or extra session, will be to tackle the tariff.

> No time is too short and no hour is too early to do right. The demand upon congress is imperative. Failure to act will not be excused by party maneuvers, for as there were no con siderations of party in the perpetration of the wrong, there need be none in its removal.

The question of reciprocal trade relations between the United States and Canada has provoked considerable discussion and interest. Whatever else the discussion may have done, it has brought out the fact that on the Canadian side of the line the agricultural situation is one that forces attention, and it has also brought forth the fact which it is well to face, that on the American side of the border, there is a vastly increasing population to be fed with a somewhat decreasing proportion of food products. This article is intended to point out to those who may wish to become of those who can raise wheat, oats, barley, flax, cattle and hogs at the least cost that the opportunities in Central Canada are what they are seeking.
